Steps 1. Go to the actual program. To open Photoshop, click Start and then search for Photoshop or open Photoshop directly by clicking the Start button at the Windows taskbar (or on the Mac, launch Photoshop from the Launchpad). 2. After it's open, click on Photoshop by the task bar. If the program isn't open, then click the Photoshop icon at the bottom of the Start menu in Windows (it looks like a picture of a light bulb). 3. On the left, you'll see the main window of Photoshop, and on the right, you'll see the work area, which contains all of the tools and functions that you will use to manipulate an image. If you open a new document, then that will be your work area. 4. Photoshop's interface is a little bit confusing at first, but the steps to creating a new document and erasing a layer are pretty straightforward. To create a new document, click on the New button. Type the name for your new document, and click on the OK button. Photoshop will create a new, empty document and give it the name that you typed. If you want a more advanced view of your document, then go to File

-> Open Recent, which will show you all the most recently opened documents. Select the one that you want to use, and Photoshop will open that document automatically. To erase a layer, simply click on the Layer or Layers pallet on the top right of the screen, then click on the Layer icon at the bottom of the pallet. When you do that, the layer will disappear. If you want to use that layer to work on again, then simply create a new document. 5. Photoshop has many different tools that you can use to manipulate an image. The most commonly used tools are the Eyedropper, White Balance, and Curves. These tools allow you to pick colors from an image, alter the colors in the image, and adjust the colors in the image. Once you have learned how to manipulate the colors, then moving an object around and adding layers will be a simple task. Tools The color-picker tool is available on the top toolbar. It is designed to allow you to quickly pick colors from any part of an image. You can use this to pick colors from a specific object or from any other part of the image. To access this warns of popularity of a yet unpatched vulnerability that can turn-off an infected system, against the 'Ghost Push' Trojan, which can potentially be used to deploy botnets for malicious activities. Hackers are trying to implement a 'Ghost Push' vulnerability that can be used to turn-off infected systems and network adapters. Digital Shadows found an unpatched vulnerability, known as CVE-

2013-1893, that could be exploited by a remote attacker to gain complete control of an affected system. The issue resides in the BroadcastMessage function in the enumeratedn component of the MibsManager. In several versions of Windows, it is possible to use a malicious script or other input data to trigger the MibsManager to send a bogus message intended to change the configuration settings on the network adapter on the system. Ghost Push is a name used by multiple malware families. Trojan-Spy.Win32.FakeSech.2 exploits the vulnerability to turn-off infected systems, and Trojan-Spy.Win32.Moloch will turn off infected network adapters. Several variants of Ghost Push exploit MS07-027 exploit, which was patched during the 7 days of Christmas, while since 5 days in December, the exploit gets much coverage by global security researchers. The Ghost Push vulnerability is spreading at a quicker rate than the known vulnerabilities in the past, with the unique feature of turning off infected systems, it is easy to exploit. "It's not often we notice a vulnerability that can turn off a system," said Danny Anaya,
